

Our Divine Connection

Why is it we long for connection? Why do we so often feel empty or lonely if we are not in the company of a kindred spirit, a soul mate, a beloved family member or friend? Why have people throughout the ages been led to band together in groups, tribes, city states and nations, finding comfort in the companionship of those who shared similar roots, beliefs, language, physiology and traditions? Why do we still? What is the driving force behind our need to socialize and form meaningful relationships with others? What is it our heart longs for, our soul remembers?

It is the communion we share with all at core, the deep energetic bond we have with everything and everyone that makes up the universe of being, the bond forged in Spirit that unites us as one. It may seem to us that this bond has been broken, that the unity that exists in Being has been shattered, that all are not of one mind, one spirit, one soul, but independent souls, needing to survive on their own. Yet spiritual sages and new-age scientists know better, each, in their own way, having proven the existence of unified states beyond our current experience of reality. In fact the deeper part of us knows better. For it is in touch with the morphic resonance that connects us with every human being on Earth, and, beyond that, in touch with the divine resonance that connects all the expressions of life, so in touch it lives in a state of absolute harmony and peace.*

No wonder we search for this bond, often risking all to achieve it. No wonder our heart yearns to be known and loved by others, comforted by their presence, safe and secure in the realization that no harm can come to us when they are near. No wonder we long to feel safe in the presence of all who live on Earth, searching for ways to make this possible. And yet, we so often fail. Why? Because our senses are busy finding ways to pull us apart, feeding limited information to our mind, forcing it to focus on the differences we have with others and how these differences make us vulnerable to attack. If we are not careful, they run amuck with us, bombarding us with images and memories of negative or evil deeds these different others have done to us or someone else, each sabotaging the deep yearning of our heart.

The question is: how can we handle these sabotaging culprits? How can we subdue our mind's inadvertent reaction to the limited input of our physical senses, freeing ourselves from the duos divisive tactics? How can we make our way back to the selfless state of divine connection we intuitively know belongs to us, regain the sense of security and peace we enjoy on the deeper levels of our being? What can we do to heal a world seeming to be at odds with itself, where most of the forms of life we observe appear to be vying with each other for power and control, willing to take extreme measures to survive?

We must bypass the reports of our physical senses and psyche, acknowledging their appearance, while simultaneously acknowledging the existence of the larger fields of information that read life quite differently, accessing these larger fields of information as often as we can. Through surrendered prayer, meditation, peace giving spiritual practices or our natural divine instinct we must open to and develop the inner pathway that leads to these larger fields, entering them and through them our intrinsic state of oneness. And we must not give up until we break through the barriers our limited senses and psyche have built for us, cultivating the spiritual sense that lies beneath them, the expanded sense enabling us to access the larger fields of information operating in the higher realms of reality where harmony and peace prevail. As we do this, as we begin to experience the living harmonious peaceful presence that pervades these larger fields, this lively presence will impact the smaller field determining our mortal experience, transforming it until it too becomes harmonious and peaceful.

You may find yourself being tested as you attempt to entertain the more unified fields of being. Most do. For the mortal psyche has no intention of giving up its reign without a fight. Yet, no matter how great the test, I would encourage you to shout it down, asking your divine essence to show you the way to the presence of unity that lives at your core, following this way as often as you can, experiencing it deeply enough to feel its loving harmonious energy resonating through you and out into the world, altering life as you know it. Even if the dissonance and hostility you observed before entering the presence does not dissolve instantly, you can rest assured it will as the presence grows stronger within you and others. Just keep tapping into the presence of Love. It will find its way into your life and the lives of others as nothing is stronger, more powerful or transformational.

How? The informational fields that comprise reality are nested fields ranging from the infinitesimal to the infinite, the infinite containing them all and having ultimate power and control. It is therefore logical to assume that as we enter ever larger fields of reality we will experience the nature of the reality present within these fields, ultimately experiencing the full presence of the unified field of being where all are united in brotherhood and love.

The truth is, the essence of us is living in this unified field right now, begging the us that seems to have lost consciousness of our divine connection to regain it. Every moment, in every way, it is urging us to expand our sense of reality, to find our way back to the oneness of being. It will not rest until it succeeds, for it wants our good, our blessing, our ultimate freedom from loneliness, hostility, war and fear. It wants us to realize that, in reality, nothing that can harm us, save our lack of connection with Being and its unified field.

So please follow the urgings of your heart. Follow them as they nudge you to let go of any belief, feeling or ego identification creating a breach between you and others, any material theory, system, prejudice or affiliation, anything that might stand in the way of your experiencing the powerful presence of Love that you share with all. Follow and discover the peace that you and the world long for. Listen to your heart and let Love have its way.
